

New Coffee Shop in Livonia, MI Helps Workers with Disabilities

Mi Work Matters is a nonprofit dedicated to improving job opportunities in Michigan, where the rate of employment for people with developmental disabilities is below 20%.

Their mission statement notes that, “At Mi Work Matters, we believe the hopes, dreams and talents of every person matter” (1).

In order to help bridge the employment gap in Michigan, Mi Work Matters recently opened Anastasia and Katie’s Coffee Shop and Café. The shop is named after two teens with Down syndrome, whose parents, Kelly Rockwell (Anastasia’s mother) and Dan Duffy (Katie’s father), are involved in Mi Work Matters. The shop is located at 19215 Merriman Road in Livonia, a suburb of Detroit.

Kelly Rockwell, a Mi Work Matters board member and the mother of Anastasia, told The Detroit News that she hopes the coffee shop “will serve as something to start the conversation about what it might look like for [other employers] to hire somebody with a disability...”

The employees at Anastasia and Katie’s Coffee Shop and Café seem to like working there. Danielle Donaldson, who has Turner’s syndrome and scoliosis, told The Detroit News that she has enjoyed learning to use the cash register, and that “[Customers] are really easy to talk to.”

Ian Edgar, who has cerebral palsy, echoed that sentiment: “I like being able to talk to people. I could talk to people all day long” (2).
